POLICE CHIEFS TO CONFER

Important Results Expected at Their Coming Congress.

Suggestions to Be Made by Major Sylvester-Ideas Will Be Presented for a Better Protection of Citizens-To Suppress Criminal Work.

Important matters are expected to come up for consideration before the annual meeting of the Association of Police Chiefs of the United States and Canada to be held next month in New York City. Major Sylvester will represent this city at from every section of the country are expected to attend. Various methods for the suppression of crime will be presented, including the interchange of photographs and measurements, together with data gathered by departments from all over the country.

It is understood that about fifty cities will be represented at the meeting of the association. Should the suggestion respecting the interchange of photographs be adopted, advantages not before enjoyed by the various departments will immediately be apparent. Faces of criminals now shown in the local regues gallery at Headquarters will be copied and sent to New York, Chicago, and other cities and towns in the circuit, so that thieves known to the police here will likewise become familiar to outside detectives and police. Besides the belief is held that measurements according to the famous Bertillon system can be circulated with ease about the country, and even abroad. So much importance is attached to these suggestions that several members of the Association of Police Chiefs have already been approached about the matter, though unofficially, yet with the idea of furthering the scheme of co-operation prior to the meeting of the general body. By in-teresting the leaders as much as possible, t is thought the idea of interchanging data of every description between cities may be successfully urged when the convention of chiefs convenes Police officials all agree that criminals are constantly on the move from one city to another. An illustration of this is shown during the inauguration of a President or some similar great gathering. when hundreds of pickpockets and thieves of every description make their way toward Washington. The same is true on the occasion of the gathering of crowds elsewhere. At such times it becomes nec-essary for the city invaded to call on other places for help, and detectives from all over the country are sent to assist in taking care of the crooks who follow the crowds. Previously detectives from distant cities have been compelled to inals from various localities, in order that they might aid materially in making arrests while detailed away from their home town. Under the scheme suggested of a general and systematic exchange of lata, however, it is urged that a wider knowledge of rascals, their ways and records, will inevitably result.

knowledge of rascals, their ways and records, will inevitably result.

Major Sylvester is known to favor expansive methods in police work, particularly when progressive ideas are urged for the better protection of the public. It is not at all certain, but he may himself suggest improvements along the lines mentioned. While it is recognized that only the large cities are now using the Bertillon system of measurements, because of the additional expense involved, there are those who assert that after the coming convention the necessity of co-operation in police work will bring about greatly improved conditions. Frequently, it is said, photographs alone fall short in the positive identification of criminals, because of changes made, both in their personal appearance and attre. There is some talk about an attempt to interest officials of Scotland Yard, England, in the annual meeting of the association. While it is not probable that a representative of the "Yard" will attend the convention this year, the feeling appears to be general that some adequate arrangement with the English authorities for the interchange of police data, besides a closer understanding and consequent co-operation, should be reached. Tentative plans seem to be on foot to ultimately bring the Scotland Yard detectives into the association, by securing as members one or more of the heads of the English police service. English theves frequently come to this country, where the lessening of migratory tactics by criminals of every class. It has been said that railroad officials and employes may assist materially in the capture and identification of thieves. Already this is the case, but in a small degree, compared with the coming of improved conditions. When a crime is committed, the railroad depots are always guarded, to prevent the escape of the criminal by train if possible.

Ticket sellers and gatemen and trainmen are all questioned, and frequently it is learned that the fugitive has made his escape prior to the arrival of news of the crime at the depot. To lessen such escapes, it has been suggested that every railroad ticket office, particularly in cities and large towns, be furnished with a rogues gallery, containing photographs of the noted criminals from all over the country. Such an idea is said to be already in vogue, for a description of every counterfeit bill discovered by the Treasury Department is sent by Secret Service officials to railroads, as well as to large financial institutions. It is urged by those interested that a like scheme could be adopted by police departments, thus giving railroad employes a chance to become familiar with faces of criminals who might apply to them for tickets or information. might apply to them for tickets or who might apply to them for tickets or information.

A uniform standard of circulars appears to be as important as a uniform system of photographs, and discussion of both may occupy time at the coming convention. If the exchange of photographs between cities receives favorable action there is likely to be an understanding as to the size and quality of such pictures. It is evident that a standard must be fixed, so that every gallery in the circuit may be properly arranged for the reception of the photographs. It would be manifestly unbusinesslike to have a large photograph sent out from Chicago, a small one from New York, and still a third size from St. Louis, because such a collection of pictures could not be placed in any gallery to advantage. Likewise with circulars, although not to such a marked degree; because of additional difficulties and ideas in various sections of the country as to the complexion of posters advertising criminals.

The perfection of the Bertillon system of measurements will doubtless consume time of the convention, because of lack of a perfect understanding in certain sections of the land as to the need and advantages of such work. The final arrangements for the execu ion of the gigantic project were made at meeting held at the Russell House at Detroit yesterday.

WAITING FOR MR. LOOMIS. His Delay in Reaching Washington

Not Fully Understood. The failure of Francis B. Loomis, United States Minister to Venezuela, who has been in New York for several days, to report to Secretary Hay is not fully understood by the officials of the State De

Despite all of this apparent urgency. Mr. Loomis has already spent three days in New York, and the State Department is as yet without any information as to when to expect him in Washington.

A private letter received here today from Caracas furnishes what seems to be an explanation of Mr. Loomis' delay. It says that Mrs. Loomis did not sail with the Minister on the Scorpion, but waited for the mail steamer which left Venezuela
